Enzo Enea is a graduate industrial designer. He studied landscape architecture in London and founded a landscape architecture and horticulture company in 1993. The company with over 200 employees has its headquarters in Rapperswil-Jona and further branches in Zurich, Miami and New York. Enea Landscape Architecture works with numerous renowned architectural studios such as Zaha Hadid, David Chipperfield, Christoph Ingenhoven, Rem Koolhaas and Tadao Andō.

The Swiss office for landscape architecture realises projects worldwide for private clients, real estate developers, companies and public clients. The project portfolio includes private gardens and terraces, gardens for hotels and restaurants, as well as holiday and outdoor facilities for corporate headquarters. The company develops complex solutions for the design of green and open spaces in international metropolises such as Beijing, Sao Paulo and Miami. His design concept includes the fusion of outdoor and indoor.

For his work, Enzo and his company have received awards from the Florida Chapter of the American Society of Landscape Architects and the Newcomer Award from the Chelsea Flower Show in London. Numerous awards from Giardina, the largest indoor trade fair, add to the company's honours. Enea is particularly pleased about the latest award, the platinum and diamond predicate of the German Sustainable Building Council (DGNB); an award that has never been given in the history of the association.

In 2010, Enzo Enea opened the world's only tree museum in Rapperswil-Jona, bringing his vision to life. In the park he designed himself, the entrepreneur and creative director shows how landscape, architecture, art and design are integratively linked.
